Climate change has evidenced a turmoil in changing weather patterns, behaviour of plants and animals, their effect on life on land, life under water is evident. To create awareness on how we are responsible for climate change the course entitled 'Climate Change and We' was conducted by the department of botany and it has been curated by the members of the botany department. Students were created awareness about the factors affecting climate change. They were trained in mapping the climate. Students learnt to calculate carbon footprints which included their own carbon footprint as well as a family how they are saving the planet by reducing the carbon footprint. Students learnt how plants can be the biggest carbon sequesters on this planet and planting trees is one effort to mitigate climate change. Students were taught to mitigate climate change at personal level and community level and trained to spread their awareness among individuals of their locality so that they can take necessary steps to stop of slow down climate change.
