REPORT

Plant conservation is one of the duties and responsibilities of plant scientists. While educating the students, it is essential that we make them aware of the various challenges which plants are facing due to rapid change in the climate. Mayuresh Kulkarni a scientist spoke about an important plant Ceropegia. Ceropegia is a genus of plants which is threatened due to its fragility. He explained about how their team detected a new species of Ceropegia from western ghats. He emphasized on the conservation status to Ceropegia is restricted to few kilometres and the plant is considered to be severely endangered. Strategies like propagating the plant either through conventional methods or through use of plant tissue culture technology. What is very important is to put the plants back into the nature and follow-up to see that they survive. Students also pledged that they would give a helping hand whenever plants have to be conserved. The session was interactive and interesting.
