Happiness Lies in the Joy of Achievement and the Thrill of Creative Effort

BY Mr. Sumedh Samarth (Brightway Education – Marketing Head)

The joy of achievement gives a special type of happiness. There is a special feeling in getting something done, getting to the end of a process, or finally getting something done. It might be a healthy sense of pride might be another way to describe it. The thrill of creative effort gives a slightly different type of happiness. It is a feeling of action, rather than completion. Putting effort into making something potentially beautiful from random thoughts, ideas, and raw inspiration is really quite a rush. The session was conducted to help make the students realize the importance of being fully happy while living life. Most importantly, how happiness lies in the joy of achieving something worthwhile and the thrill of creative effort was discussed in detail.
