About the Speaker:

Mr Hemant Kharkhanis is an enthusiastic nature lover. After having completed his post graduation in Entomology and Biotechnology, he got into research in the field of Mangroves and Insects. He has 14 years of experience in study of mangroves and the biodiversity that these wetlands harbor in them. He was principal investigator on DST project on Mangroves. Past 10 years, Mr Hemant has been associated with Godrej & Boyce planning and executing means and methods of mangrove conservation and protection. He with his fellow team member, Mr Deshpande has conducted several sessions on awareness about mangrove vegetation, their importance and their protection. He organizes nature trails for enthusiastic nature lovers who wish to close watch the wetlands and study other flora and fauna closely associated with them. He is highly passionate about photography and as a result he has large collection of nature captured in his photographs, largely mangroves and insects which he shares happily with all the students. He describes this sharing of photographs as one of the means of creating awareness among common people about these green lungs of the city of Mumbai.

REPORT

MANGROVES THROUGH THE EYES OF BIOLOGISTS

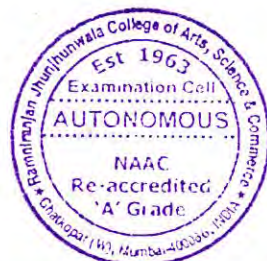

BEYOND THE CAMPUS

He opened his session with a beautiful picture of Godrej Mangrove part with Asia's largest creek 'Thane Creek' in the backdrop. He gave an overview of the world mangrove distribution and stated some facts about Mumbai mangroves as green lungs of the city. He covered information on the largest mangrove forest of Sundarbans to the isolated patches of mangroves in Maharashtra with 52 creeks including Thane Creek. He described river mangroves and red mangroves and grey mangroves. While explaining adaptations of mangroves to saline environment, he discussed salt glands, Pneumatophores, vivipary, etc. He highlighted role of mangroves in ecosystem as a source of food, livelihood for fisher folks, raw materials like timber, fuel, tannins and medicines. The rich biodiversity of Godrej Mangrove Park was placed in front of the audience with colourful visuals and lucid commentary. The session ended with information on Indian Laws for mangrove protection and related aspects that help in conservation and protection of mangrove ecosystem.
