REPORT

The Department of Botany is organized the Inaugural Session of Botanica on Friday, 13th July 2018. A talk on City Farming was delivered by Dr. Ramesh Shah. Urban areas have space crunch in view of that alternative methods of green initiatives must be explored. Similarly, large no. of leafy vegetables are grown by irrigating them with polluted water which carries toxic waste like organic solvents, heavy metals etc. These get accumulated in the edible portion and enter the food chain of which human beings are an integral part resulting in several diseases. One way of assuring that at least we are able to grow our own produce is practising city farming. This is contribution to sustainability by using our vegetable waste as compost to grow the plants in city farming. All students were happy to note how Dr. Shah practices cultivation of vegetables in his terrace garden and manages domestic waste by composting them. The session was interactive and had a message of sustainability for all of us. The toppers of academic year 2017-2019 from TYBSc Botany were felicitated Dr. Shah which motivated other students.
